“ Feeling honored is creeping up to give sadness the "boot"! The first day I met Steve will be with me forever. I was new at work. Nervous. Steve came to chiropractor for relief. His first visit. My first new person. I had never taken blood pressure before and had no help from coworkers or boss. Steve showed me how and then took his own blood pressure and showed me how to write it down. He said his cancer was in remission. His eyes filled up a bit, then, so did mine. He said he did that every time he said remission. He was so happy! He made everything okay. Correction, he made everything better! His genuine "unjudgy" kindness made everything better!

I am shocked and saddened for his passing but, I am grateful and so honored to have known him. Thinking of him makes me smile.
