“ I didn't meet Sue until shortly after her husband Jim passed away so suddenly. I had worked for Jim and he was a wonderful man to work for. On several occasions I had the opportunity to help Sue with her computer. She was always fun to be around and fun to help. She was a good friend to my wife and we always enjoyed visiting with her. She endured her trials well and I know she is happy to finally be on the other side with Jim.

“ Sue and I were in the Caregivers Support Group at Elder Care together as long as we both attended. Some of our group were distraught with overwhelming responsibility. During meetings Sue was always candid and understanding of others burdens while she met her own. Our group went to lunch together at Goldie's and she helped us find humor while we drew strength from each other. She was especially helpful to one young man whose wife had M.S. and was near death. In his isolation he had strongly considered suicide until he found friends. She was a spiritual woman who directed our thoughts to strength sources some had never considered. Our group respected, valued and loved Sue who for several Christmas seasons hosted our group party. Her death at this time of year is especially poignant.

With respect, Robbie Williams and the Care Givers Support Group
